Judge Parker and the Text-Book.

lessness are the feelings of English "high and manners fives to-day. According to that the world must look have so dulled and wearied the public's of living can be recovered. The cause of it all is the nerve-racking pace at which 'dividends' have been pursued by everybody, from peers to pastry cooks. The evil of unrest, dissatisfaction and ennul. Scenery and nature have lost their charm because they do not pay dividends. Trips are pooh-poohed for the same reason; books are laughed out of face unless they are tips on South African gold mines. and the whole theory and basis of happi ness and life is reduced to pounds. that all classes have deliberately set out to get all the money possible from every else. But the independents were persistent and they carried the matter so far that despite Mr. Roosevelt's desire to hush the whole thing up, the question will at last be given a hearing. Press dispatches of yesterday stated that Mr. Roosevelt had ordered both the independ ents and the tobacco trust to appear be fore him, and would decide what would be done. That the case should ever have required executive handling is another proof of the leaning of the Republican party towards its especial pet and crealon, the trust.

times is the growing demand for flats and the restrictions which this demand this evil could be remedied instantly if the people chose to take the trouble to own their homes. There is no wiser investment for happiness, for health, and for growth in all lines than to buy a home. The average man pays from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. of his income for rent. Of course, if he bought a house on a mortgage, he would pay interest, which would take a part of his income just as well as rent. But it would not take so much, and at the end of the time he would own his house, while the renter has no more at the end than at the be-ginning. It really is not hard to do, for the saving to purchase a home is necessarily lightened of most of its burden when the man feels that he is saving to some purpose. With ownership comes the desire to beautify and enlarge, and i is always the cities of homes that are the cities of heauty. No city of apartbeautiful, and no life in rented places will ever be as full or as satisfactory as that spent under a roof which is owned by the family. The home owner has ence of stability and strength-a sort of right to live that makes him the backbone for good or evil in the community where he lives. The sense of proprietor, ship awakens all sorts of higher instincts, and the whole world profits thereby. All the great architecture of the world is the result of men's desire to express their ideals for themselves-on their own, or their churches, or their State's property. But who ever heard of a renter beautifying his temporary abiding place by adding carvings, or
